

End of Days Crag N44 03.617 W71 09.942

Approach: 0.4 miles, 150' elevation gain, 12 minutes

This small cliff sits low on the hillside left of Cathedral. It offers a small handful of safe, short routes on good rock.

Access: Park at the entrance to the Bryce Path, which leads to Whitehorse (N44 03.740 W71 09.729).

Approach: Take the Bryce Path, marked with yellow blazes, for 0.3 miles then take an overgrown forest track on the right (N44 03.575 W71 09.906). If you've reached a trail junction where the Echo Lake Trail breaks off, you've gone too far. This track climbs up the hill a little, then curves back around to head straight toward the crag (N44 03.617 W71 09.947). The routes are described from left to right.

1 Intentional Grounding 30' 5.10b

Ian & Brad White. August 2002.

Climb straight up the often-wet brown streak (3 b's) to a two-bolt anchor.

2 Lazy Days 30' 5.11c

Jay Dufresne, Brad White. Summer 2004.

This route starts up the tiny corner in the clean face to the right of the previous route. Two-bolt anchor (3 b's).

3 End of Days 40' 5.11a

Brad White. June 2002.

This route climbs the left arête of the right wall. Stick clip the first bolt. Climb up to a roof at 20'. Pull the roof and make crux moves up a short headwall to a two-bolt anchor (4 b's).

4 Tres Agujeros 40' 5.11d ★

Matt Desenberg, Chris Magness. Spring 2012.

Start from the right side of a block at the base, just left of Fingerlust. Move up the face (harder without the holds in the shallow dihedral to the left) to a break then a shorter, but still demanding, final face to a two-bolt anchor (5 b's).

5 Fingerlust 40' 5.12a/b

Jerry Handren. Summer 1988.

The face with an incipient crack right of Tres Agujeros. Vicious finger locks lead past a bolt and a pin to a good horizontal. Finish easily up a dirty groove.

Leafspring Wall N44 03.710 W71 09.889

Approach: 260 yards, 5 minutes

This small but impressive wall is located in the woods almost directly down the hill from the left side of the Ventilator Slabs.

Approach: From the main parking area (N44 03.815 W71 09.837), a trail signed 'Lower Left Wall' leads leftward (south) along the base of the slope underneath the cliff. After a few hundred yards, the trail turns up the hill and zigzags up the slope toward the cliff. About 50 yards before reaching the base of the main cliff, cut off left to a small cliff band (N44 03.710 W71 09.889).

At the left end of the cliff is Leafspring: a short, sharply overhanging offwidth.

1 Leafspring 65' 5.11d

Double 3" to 5" cams, one 7"

Battle up the offwidth and pull over onto a low-angled slab. Follow the hand crack up the slab to the top. Tree anchor.

2 Hyacinth 40' 5.14a ★★

Tom Moulin. May 2019.

A big move then a building boulder problem. Start about 10' right of Leafspring. Climb the overhang up and right, generally following a faint white dike, to a mantle and two-bolt anchor (6 b's).

In the center of the overhang there are various remnants of an aid climbing excursion: pins, a bashie, and a bolt.

3 The Warm Up 40' 5.12b

Scramble up blocky terrain to the right-most left-facing layback flake. A long reach in the flake leads to a rail. Move right along the rail then up to a tricky exit to a two-bolt anchor (3 b's).

4 Fisting Jon 25' 5.9

Double 3" to 4" cams.

At the right side of the wall is a semi-detached flake. This route climbs the flake left to right. Downclimb the right side, or pre-set an anchor from the trees above.
